They were going to prove that this young lady went out to buy poison, but it was not proved: it was not allowed, and I shall expect the district attorney to get up and say so, or I shall be disappointed in him. They were going to show the defendant had contradicted herself, but the court said this was not proper. Now you are not going to say, I rather think, Messrs, Knowlton and Moody would not have offered this if they had not proof, but this won't do. Decide this case from the evidence on the witness stand and nothing else, so you will leave those things out. My intention is not to distort facts, but to find out just how we stand. Things that are not in dispute I will not touch and I trust I will not by a single letter step over the line of proof or deal unjustly with the Commonwealth so dear to us

Governor Robinson then began a chronological description of the events connected with the crime as they appeared from the evidence. He said: It is for us to see if the defendant did it. I see no reason to connect a confederate with it. There sits the defendant, accused of the foulest and darkest of crimes. Let us see where the chain is to be found which binds her to these terrible accounts. Why must the district attor-ney show a motive in this case! Simply to explain the evidence. There is no direct evidence against Miss Borden. No weapon whatever and no knowledge of the use of one has been shown. It is not shown she ever used an implement of such a character. The evidence shows she did not know where they were kept. Not a spot on her from her hair to her feet, on her dress or anywhere. Think of it. Yes, there was one spot on her skirt as big as the point of a pin-That was not where you expected it to be if she had done it, in an out of the way place. I don't know even of a Fall River policeman, from the top down, who believes that that fly-speck of blood had anything to do with the case.

THE MISSING HATCHET HANDLE. Then there was a bundle of burnt paper which Mr. Phillip Harrington found. Then there were mean assertions made that Dr. Bowen was doing something. We thought they had the handle there, wrapped up in the newspaper, and that the handle had been burnt up entirely, and that the newspaper, which lives forever, only reained. What a funny fire. That handle is still flying through the air somewhere. A poor orphan handle without its hatchet. For heavens pake get the 125 policemen of Fall River and thase it. Let them catch it and reunite it to its

Lizzie Borden was at home that day. There was nothing strange in that. It was better for her to be at home in her room than out in the streets. If Miss Borden had gone upstairs that morning and looked under the bed she might have seen the body of her stepmother. There is no evidence to show that the door of that room was wide open. The prosecution assumes that the door was wide open. The door may have been only ajar. It may have been closed, Miss Lizzie had no occasion to go into that room. She would not be likely to do so, judging from the evidence introduced as to the family relations. It is true that she went upstairs and saw her stepmother making the bed in the spare room. It makes no difference how many times she went up and down stairs that day. Grant that she did go upstairs at about 9 o'clock. Mrs. Bor-den was alive then. They say she stayed up there without offering any evidence on that Point.

There is the note. Bridget says she saw the stepmother get a note from some one who was pick, and that she had gone out. Bridget says "she did not tell me where she was going; she generally does. She hurried off." Lizzie did not say anything about her hurrying off. Now, both Lizzle and Bridget tell about the note, and both were told of it by Mrs. Borden. Bridget said Mrs. Borden was dusting the sitting room just before she went away. The district attorney says Lizzie lied about the note. Now, Bridget tells the most complete story about the note.

The speaker drew the inference that it was Bridget who told Lizzie about the note. He contended that the burning of the note was the suggestion of Miss Russell and not a statement made by Lizzie. Continuing, the ex-Governor said: "A person may say 'where is the note? We cannot find it. The note may be part of the scheme of Mrs. Borden. There are people around here now who have not heard of this case." The inference of the lawyer was that it might have been written by some one who did not know the trial was going on, and if they knew it would come forward and tell all they knew about it, The visit to the barn was next taken up. Mr. Robinson said:

Lizzie had told Bridget that she was in the barn, heard a groun and went into the through the open screen door. Dr. Bowen asked her "where have you been!" She said she had been out in the barn for iron. To Mrs. Churchill she said she had gone to the barn for a piece of tin or iron with which to fix her screen. Mr. Fleet asked her whether she had been out in the barn twenty or thirty minutes. He had a theory, and was ferreting out a crime. the said: "I was out there twenty minutes." He had not ordered her to silence then. She Fleet said to her: "Weil, call it twenty minutes." Kind of him, wasn't it! He was willing to make it twenty minutes. You have heard about the picuic at Marion, There is water up there in which fish swim. It is only natural that a party of young folks would want to catch something-fish, I mean. Now, did she go into the barn! She says she did. The ice-cream eddler came along. He had sold ice cream to Bridget and had sold none to Lizzle. Fo he knew Bridget. He went by, looking into the yard. He saw a woman, not Bridget, whom he knew, walking to the house from the barn. If it was not Miss Borden there must have been a stranger there. Mullaliv-vou remember Mullally—he is one of the knights of the handle. He says that on Aug. 8 Rubinskt told him of having seen a woman walking from the barn to the house. Mullally comes here and says Rubinski told him it was 10:30 when he saw the woman in

Counsel drew attention to the fact that the stable-keeper where Rubinski kept his horse had corroborated him as to the time. and so had Newhall, the man from Provi-

NOT UP TO EXPECTATIONS.

A recess for five minutes was taken at this point. The summing ap of ex-Governor Robinson, so far as it had gone, was dissussed freely. Much disappointment was expressed about it. The ex-Governor's effort had not been so great as had been expected of him. The lawyers said the facts in the case had not been handled as they had been led to believe they would. After recess the ex-Governor said

Bridget, when she heard Mr. Borden was dead. said she would go to Mrs. Whitehead's and tell Mrs. Borden, if she was there. That corroborated the theory of that note. If you presume that the defendant is guilty, the suggestion of the prosecution would be that Miss Borden told Mrs. Churchill and Bridget to go upstairs by the front way and find Mrs. Borden. She thought Mrs. Borden had come in. Perhaps it was the siamming of the door, perhaps the moving about of some one in the house that she heard. Now, they say, she showed no feeling. That when her stepmother lay dead in the spare room she stood at the head of the stairs and laughed. Well, if you are down stairs in your own house and some one eracks a joke you laugh at it. But suppose your son drops dead in a room upstairs, then you, who do not know he is dead, are a hard hearted wretch because you laughed at the joke. The way the Borden's lived, how the house was furnished or what they had to eat each day has nothing to do with the case. The old fashioped dinner is just as good as the fancy things we get

Mr. Robinson then took up the question of motive, saying:

Now, what sort of combination are you trying to make of this woman. She kills her stepmother because she did not like her, and killed her father whom she did like, because she wanted his money! Miss Lizzie said Mrs. Borden was her stepmother and not her mother. The emphatic policeman, Fleet, told that. She had said to Mrs. Gifford, the dressmaker, that her stepmother was a mean old thing and that they did not have much to do with each other. But Bridget Sullivan, who for two years had been closer to the family than any one else, had never heard a Quarrel between them. I agree with you that Lizzie Borden is not a saint.

Counsel ventured the assertion that the members of the jury were not saints. He told the jury that there were other men as handsome as they. The girls didn't come down to breakfast with the others in the family. They remained up late. "Here was a man," he continued, "with no ornament of any kind except one-a ring on one of his fingers. When he was buried it was put into the grave with him. A simple old man wearing that evidence of affection for

MISS LIZZIE AFFECTED.

As the speaker was running on thus, Miss Lizzie furnished evidences of emotion. She did not take the fan from her face, but moved a little so she could place her handkerchief to her eyes. Continuing, the lawyer said:

Lizzie Borden told Miss Russell of fears she had that something would happen to the family. They say that this shows she had murder in her heart. They say Miss Lizzie burned her dress. The common way to get rid of old things is to burn them. The government says: "You gave ing in these blows but hatred, and a great, us this dress and it is not the dress. We want strong man would have taken the hatchet and the Bedford cord." We say, "We burned it." with only one blow would have made an end of Vacre is a difference between those who saw Miss Lizzie that morning. Some of them are misthough it had blood on it and accepted it as the dress. But when they found, through Professor Wood, that there was no blood on it they say it is not the dress, and ask for the Bedford cord. The dress had been lying in the clothes press until Miss Emma, looking for some place to hang a dress, came across the paint-stained dress, and asked Miss Lizzle why she did not burn it up. The truth is, Dr. Dolan found this, which he thought was blood stained, and when they searched the house it was only a farce. They did not really care to search any more, thinking they had the of the crime.

blood-stained garment which would convict her If Lizzie Borden killed her stepmother at 9:45, did she come down and greet her father in that blood-stained dress? She must have stood astride her stepmother and smashed the hatchet into her head. She must have walked into the sea of blood, scattered it all over herself, changed her clothing, and changed it again after the second slaughter. I would not be surprised if they said she did the slaughtering while nude. My heart aches to think what may be the theory of the prosecution. She did not try to get Bridget out sent her out on some errand!

The claw-headed hatchet was then taken up by the lawyer. He pointed out that Dr. Dolan and other doctors disagreed as to what had been used to kill the Bordens. Dr. Dolan had insisted that one of the blows had been struck with the clawheaded batchet. The other doctors said such had not been the case at all. The handleless hatchet was referred to. Ex-Governor Robinson maintained that the blade of the batchet could not cut its way cleanly through Mr. Borden's eyeball nor could it have made a cut in Mrs. Borden's hair as if it had been made with a shears. The bair found on the claw-headed hatchet which the government had at first cailed dog hair was cow hair. "If those are not the implements with which the murders were committed, where are they?" he asked. Fall River appears to be prolific in the way of batchets." During the latter portion of the summing up in her favor Miss Borden removed her fan from her face, leaned forward and looked steadily at the jury. She held her head somewhat to the right and waved her fan gently. She never smiled when the ex-Governor told what the late Benjamin F. Butler had said of the case. It was: "Why does not Dr. Dolan hold an autopsy on Lizzie Borden and find the batchet.'

Continuing, Mr. Robinson said: The exclusive opportunity theory was simply an anticipation which was not realized. The side screen door was unfastened from 9 o'clock that morning until 11:15. The back screen door was open. A person could get into the house by imply avoiding Bridget on the outside and Lizzie on the inside. A man might have gone to the house for the purpose of killing Mr. Borden, and happening to meet Mrs. Borden-probably some one she knew-struck her down. Then he waited for Mr. Borden to come home and killed him. It would have been the most natural thing in the world for the assassin to have left the door of the spare room open. Then as to the young man who was seen outside: what was he but the outside spy of the one committing the deed! The job was not done by one man alone.

ROWDY WOMEN. At this point a recess was taken. Mr. Robinsen had talked half an hour longer than the time which had been allotted to him, and had not yet finished. What he said, and the way he said it, disappointed his friends very much. During the recess for dinner there were many peculiar manifestations on the part of some of the women. A great many of them remained in the court room and would not leave. Others massed themselves at the entrances. When they could not get in themselves they manifested an inclination to permit no one else to do so, The result was there was the greatest crush of humanity that this town has ever seen. Handsome gowns of all, the women seemed to enjoy it. They were prepared, apparently, to go to any length to get into the court room. When they did get in they wedged themselves into every place and stood in the room fully contented, although it was difficult to breathe. Ex-Governor Robinson resumed his summing up when the court reassembled. He advised the jury not to jump at conclusions, and reminded them of the solemnity of the duty which devolved upon them He said he forgot to speak about the testi-mony of Mr. Medley, with reference to the dust on the floor of the barn. Medley could not find traces of Miss Lizzie's tootsteps in the dust, but before Medley went there, two boys, described by one of them as "Me and Brownie," had been up there tramping about, and so had others. Mr. Medley was mistaken, the lawyer said. The hatchet, which would not fit the hole in the skull of Mrs. Borden, was referred to

If there had been any blood on the defendant's hair, those who were bathing her face and administering to her would have discovered it. she committed the murder, she must have killed Mrs. Borden first. Then it would have been necessary for her to bave gone down into the cellar where there was running water and washed herself, her hair included, thoroughly. When you assume that, you put an awful lot on her to perform in a short time. She looked all right when her father came home. Then she must have gone down the cellar again, put on the blue dress, and went up stairs, killed her father, and then went to the cellar again, changed her clothing and disposed of them so effectually that no trace of them has yet been found. Then she must have hurried to clean the hatchet, if you assume she committed the crimes, and prepared it by drying it and placing dust on it so as to present the same appearance as when thirty-two years, brought up in one of our homes serving God and man, teaching the ignorant and down-trodden, would not blaze out as a human monster. Suppose she had been wicked and designing, and Bridget as innocent as she is now, would it not have been simple for her to drive Bridget into the toils and save herself! But when the name of Bridget was mentioned to her she said Bridget could not have done it.

Miss Borden listened to her counsel for a few minutes, and then covered her face. Just then he was saying she had made no unseemly exhibitions in the court, had borne herself bravely, but that when she was free again the woman nature would come back to her and assert itself, and she would cry. It was 3 o'clock when ex-Governor Robinson closed, after having made a speech four and three-quarters hours in length. As he was closing Lizzie began to weep. Her face was red and swollen when she removed her handkerchief from it.

MR, KNOWLTON SUMS UP.

The District Attorney Reviews the Evidence for the Prosecution.

When the jury returned it was 3:07 o'clock. Half a minute later District Attorney Knowlton began to sum up for the prosecution. He said in part: However we may differ, we can agree that this is a most heartrending case. It was a terrible crime. When the news of it spread a thousand men in the community turned detectives. If you had read the details of he crime in a novel you would have said it was good enough for a novel, but that such a thing could not happen in actual life.

The woman we are trying is a Christian woman, as that ferm is used to-day. She is a lady, the equal of your wife and my wife. She is a lady whom we would never have suspected of such a thing. Is sex a protection against crime? I do not speak lightly of influence of Christian parentage. It is hard to consider women guilty of such a crime. If they lack in strength they make up for it in conning and sagacity. If they are stronger in love they are also stronger in their hatred. The greatest criminals of the world have been women. We must face this case as men.

Mr. Knowlton spoke of the fact that it had been said of him that he was animated by a spirit of revenge or ambition. The shaft had struck home, but he wanted it understood that what he did had been done solely from a sense of duty. If he could have retired from the prosecution with honor he would have been glad to do so. He spoke in a low tone and with a serious manner, and what he uttered produced a considerable effect in the court room. Continuing, he said: Let me say a word as to the nature of the evidence. We have produced every person as a witness whom we thought could shed any light on the matter. There is another class of witnesses, and that is the policemen. They pursued every avenue which would lead them to a possible solution of the case I cannot tell you how many men have been followed and watched. in how many cities investigations have been made. A blue coat does not make them any better, nor should it make them any worse. No one who has told of it had seen Lizzie Borden burn that Bedford cord dress. We know what she said and did before and after that. But it was established that the couple had been killed at separate times. While Mr. Borden was down in the bank that morning the assassin met his wife in that room and killed her. This is a tremendous fact. It is the key to the situation. It was the murder of Mrs. Borden. It was against her the hate was directed. It was not to be believed the assassin entered the house, killed the old woman and then waited au hour and a half-for the old man to return. There was one woman in the world who believed that old woman stood between her father and herself. There was noth-

it. The arm that wielded that hatchet was strong only in hatred. That Borden house was the most zealously-guarded house I ever heard of. Here the speaker reviewed the move-ments of the family on the morning of the murder. He said: Mr. Borden goes down town; Bridget goes out washing windows; Mrs. Borden goes into the guests' chamber, and Lizzie and she are abovestairs. Lizzie then goes outdoors to see if Bridget is fairly at her work, and then goes back and the murder was done. Up to the time the murder was done there was no room for the assassin to come in. When that woman fell under the blows the fall must have been heard by whoever was in the house at the time. If Lizzie was down stairs she was in the pathway of the assassin; if she was upstairs she was on the same floor quite near, and she could not have helped hearing. No matter how craftily murder is planned there is always some point where the plans fail, and they failed here at the critical time. She was alone in the house at the time with the murdered woman. She must have known it, and she knew that by and by there was coming into the house a stern and just man, who would have noticed the absence of the house. Don't you think she would have of his beloved wife, and who would have asked for her, and that question must be answered. He came in and she went to him and said: "Mother has had a note and gone out." When Bridget got through her work Liz-zie told her that she was going to lock the screen door, as Mrs. Borden had gone out and she might go out, too. Counsel on the other side said this statement was not a lie, but there was no note. There never was anybody sick, and the note storyoriginated with Lizzie Borden. Bridget Sullivan said she never heard auybody come in and out, and she never saw any note and the first she heard of it was what Lizzie

Mr. Knowlton had not concluded his argument when court adjourned for the day.

FELIX BORDEN LOCATED.

He Was Traveling with a Circus When the Fall River Murders Occurred. NEW BEDFORD, Mass., June 19.-Felix Borden has been located here. He says he is the adopted son of Charles T. Borden, who is distantly related to Andrew J. Borden. Young Borden says he knew Lizzie and her father only by sight and reputation, and if he told Mrs. Ramsey, at Baltimore, that Lizzie committed the murders his opinion was formed on the newspaper reports and not from any knowledge of Lizzie's character. He could not remember either just where he was at the time of the murder, because he was then in the circus business and it kept him traveling most of the time, but he had an idea that he was in Providence.

WON'T FIGHT CLEMENCEAU

MM. Deroulede and Millevoye Decline to Go On the Field of Honor.

Row in the Chamber of Deputies That Resulted in Two Challenges-The Pope Appoints a New Secretary of the Vatican.

Paris, June 19 .- A lively scene was witnessed in the Chamber of Deputies to-day during the debate on the electoral reform bill, and the outcome was a challenge to fight a duel which, however, was not accepted. M. Clemenceau, the well known Radical Republican, opposed the bill, and during his speech against the measure he was several times interrupted by M. Paul Deroulede and M. Lucien Millevoye, leadwere torn and trampled on, and, strangest | ing Boulangists, who were strongly in favor of the adoption of the bill. The language employed by both Deroulede and Millevoye was violent, and finally M. Clemenceau, old parliamentarian as he is, become incensed and, turning towards Deroulede, called him an "alien." M. Millevoye at once sprang to his feet in defense of his political colleague and, pointing a finger at M. Clemenceau, who was speaking from the tribune, exclaimed: "Coward." This epithet at once caused an uproar in the Chamber. When order was restored the debate was continued and finally a vote was taken on the bill, which the Chamber rejected. This evening M. Clemenceau sent MM. Menard-Dorian and Salis, both of whom are members of the Chamber, to the residence of M. Deroulede with a challenge to settle the quarrel on the field of honor. M. Deroulede received the representatives of Clemenceau and, after reading the challenge, told them to inform their principal that he had decided not to grant him reparation. Upon receipt of Deronlede's reply to his challenge Clemenceau requested MM. Rabier and Winkersheimer to convey a challenge to tight a duel to M. Millevoye They did so, and they also met with a refusal to fight. Millevoye said that he would not accept the challenge, but he added that he himself would challenge Clemenceau to fight after the debate in the Chamber on the question of the extradition from England of M. Herz, who is charged with having been implicated in the Panama canal frauds and briberies.

FIFTH SUBURBAN HANDICAP.

Probable Starters in To-Days Great Race at Sheepshead Bay. NEW YORK, June 19.-Everything ready at Sheepshead Bay for the running of the fifth Suburban Handicap. 'The race is for a stake of $25,000. of which $18,000 goes to the winner of the race. That it will not be a one-horse race seems more certain now than at any time since people began to discuss the possibilities of the event. That is because Lamplighter, the horse supposed to have a sure thing in the race, has in the past week developed the ugliest kind of a temper, which has shown itself in a refusal to do any work for the race. He was tried on both Saturday and Sunday morning, and the work he could be persuaded to do was so utterly bad that trainers think there must be something wrong with him. He could not or would not beat Kildeer, and she was beaten to-day without any trouble by Count. That is the sort of form he has shown in his past two trials, and in that form he does not seem to have a chance on earth to be in the first three at the finish. The peculiar conditions that exist make all the other horses in the race more factors than they would be were Lamplighter known to be ready and willing to race. Horsemen generally believe that Banquet is the most dangerous factor in the race. Dr. Hastrouck is a probable starter, though it was not certain to-night that his owner would start him, as he fears he will find the distance a bit too far for Colonel North, of England, will be represented in the race in all probability by his horse Iddesleigh, who does not seem to have a ghost of a chance in the race. The two other horses aunounced as starters for the race are Mars and Pessara. The former is the foriorn hope of the Morris stable and the latter will be the representative of Walcott and Campbell, who won the Brooklyn handicap with Diablo. Following are the proba-ble starters: Third Race-The Suburban; a bandicap sweepstakes of $500 each, half forfeit; the association to add the amount necessary to make the value of the race $25,000; the second to receive $5.000 and the third $2,000 of the money so added; one mile and a quarter. Lamplighter, 129; Banquet, 126; Raceland, 118; Charade, 117; Dr. Hasbrouck, 116; Pessara, 115; Mars, The Pepper, 111 each; Iddesleigh, Lowlander, 105 each; Terrifier, 95.

The American Derby. CHICAGO, June 19. - If the present superb weather continues the American Derby at Washington Park, next Saturday, will be run over the fastest track in the history of the big event. Those stables which have arrived and are sending their candidates over the course on which the sixty-thousand-dollar stake is to be won and lost have a great advantage, as every condition is favorable to training. M. F. Dwyer's colt, Don Alonzo, the favorite in advance betting for the event, arrived at the track this morning. He and his stable companion, Nomad, showed no ill effects of the journey. Don Alonzo was given no work to-day, but will be asked to go the distance to-morrow or next day. The opinion of those who saw the Dwyer colt is that he is now fit to go into the race. The elder Lambley will be here to ride him Saturday. G. W. Johnson came Sunday morning, and are concerned.

is universally admitted to outclass any of the other Derby candidates so far as looks His work, however, has not impressed the rail birds. There is a suspicion that the Onede stable is keeping Johnson's real ability concealed. Lookout and Boundless, of the Cushing stable, were exercised a mile and a quarter to-day. Lookout was kept in front but appeared to want to quit, and Boundless was kept under a strong rein. Strathrose, the English candidate, exercised at a slow gait, as is the custom of trainer Sweeper. D. J. McCarty's Oporto has begun to attract some attention. He went a mile in 1:47 to-day, drawing away from Bernardo easily. McCarty won the Derby in 1879.
